CALL FOR PAPERS

POST-PANDEMIC ECONOMY AND SOCIETY

Since its inception, the Economy and Contemporary Society (ECS) journal (the former Yearbook of the “Gh. Zane” Institute of Economic Researches) has taken a special interest in assessing how major events affect the societies' economy.

The extent and nature of the consequences of the COVID-19 pandemic are still difficult to imagine. Only a few weeks were enough to disrupt and question the way societies function. The transformations and responses being developed will have structural effects for decades.

This call for papers launched by ECS journal aims to engage the debate beyond the immediate news and invites researchers in the economic and social sciences to contribute with empirical, analytical and theoretical papers on the economic, political and social issues of the post-pandemic. The Editors are keen to receive articles that might address how the pandemic challenges the basic assumptions of social and economic sciences and their presuppositions about risk and uncertainty, the forms and power of the state and, more broadly, institutional regimes, global value chains, demographic dynamics, tourism and rural development, the social relationship to environment, the crisis effects on supply chains, food security, or rural areas at risk and the resilience of the agricultural systems, socio-economic policies, etc.

Given the variety and scope of the issues raised by COVID-19, this call is not limited to the above-mentioned themes. Articles that adopt interdisciplinary approaches, or include policy-oriented conclusions, are also welcomed. The central idea of the call is to allow the scientific community to read and write solid and structured contributions, capable of shedding light on a necessary but difficult discussion, given the particular conditions of its production.
